LOCAL HISTORY BY CLAYTON J. BARKER

History of the Westbrook Place

By Clayton J. Barker. Copyright © 2010 to 2026 by Clayton J. Barker

A trailer load from the Westbrook House goes through the gates of Westfield Heritage Village, Rockton, in 2010. Photo submitted by Clayton J. Barker.

The house stood at 18 King Street, Oakland, Ontario. It was moved on a trailer to Westfield Heritage Village, Rockton, in 2010.

Note: It is a structure that had witnessed the last battle of the War of 1812 fought on Canadian soil against a foreign power...

According to the 1851 census of Oakland, this home was occupied by three families and in the 1861 census there was listed two dwellings on the property: a one storey bricked dwelling and the older one storey frame house, which had been turned into a hired hand's house. Sometime between 1852 and 1855 the old dwelling was moved over to a new location on the farm to make way for the newer home, and it was placed on a foundation.

By the 1850's, cast Iron stoves were common so instead of having the large chimney going up through the middle of the building, they retrofit a new stairway into the hole where the chimney had once been. Though early blacksmith's wrought iron nails (known as "rose head" nails) were discovered in the wood, many of the original components of the building was fastened together with early "cut nails" which are dated to before 1814. These types of nails made their way into this part of Upper Canada from the U.S. sometime after 1807.

History of the Westbrook Place

Later on, a new type of “cut nail” was being manufactured right up until the beginning of the 20th Century, which was also found throughout portions of this building, especially where elements had been altered in the mid 1800s or later. These nails (people call “old square nails”) look similar to the early “cut nails”, except that they are made by a different cutting device that made more nails and quicker and the burr left on the edges of the nail are different.

In the 1920’s this old building was considered “ancient” and was over 100 years old then, according to the local inhabitants of Oakland and even the historians at that time. A longtime resident and Historian named Walter Burrage (Author of “A pioneer history of South Brant and the adjacent townships”) compiled a history of the Westbrook family and also the Barnes family who once lived in the building.

ARCHITECTURAL FEATURES

- Narrow muntin bars of 12/12, 12/8 and 6/6 windows
- Cornice returns
- 5” to the weather clapboard siding
- Wide frieze board
- Wide plinth surround board
- Centre stone (Maryland style) fireplace with brick chimney top
- Exposed interior beams whitewashed on half the interior rooms
- “Ship’s ladder” style stair
- Tapered rafters
- No ridge board
- Sash saw or pit sawn lumber from water powered sawmill (straight up and down saw, not circular saw)
- Riven lath
- Blacksmith nails
- Type ‘A’ cut nails

Scale model constructed by Clayton Barker depicting what the Westbrook House will look like when it is rebuilt at Westfield Heritage Village, Rockton.

Note: The framing on the end walls included blocking for cornice returns which is probably the only remnant exterior architectural feature to determine the style.

It was a struggle, but on April 26th, 2010 the Westbrook House escaped the clutches of small town bureaucracy, and made it safely through the “pearly gates” of what is probably like “Heritage Heaven” to all the unwanted historical buildings of Central Ontario! It was reconstructed between 2012 and 2014 at Westfield Heritage Village, Rockton. Ont.
